

TEACH OUT POLICIES

Teach Out Policies for Bachelor's and Master's Programs

The University of San Francisco is committed to making it possible for all students to finish the bachelor's or master's program in which they have enrolled. Should a bachelor's or master's program be discontinued, the University will continue offering the required courses (regardless of the number of students enrolled) for a maximum of five (5) years after the last incoming group of students would have been able to finish the program and meet all degree graduation requirements. Graduation requirements can be met through regularly scheduled courses or through independent study sessions led by the faculty in the Program.

Teach Out Policies for Doctoral Programs

The University of San Francisco is committed to making it possible for all students to finish the doctoral program in which they have enrolled. Should a doctoral program be discontinued, the University will continue offering the required courses (regardless of the number of students enrolled) for a maximum of five (5) years after the last incoming group of students would have been able to finish the program and meet all degree graduation requirements. Graduation requirements can be met through regularly scheduled courses or through independent study sessions led by the faculty in the Program.

Teach Out Policy for Online Programs

If the University decides to cancel a program that is delivered online, all necessary courses will continue to be offered until the last cohort or group of students completes all degree requirements. Any student(s) who have pending requirements (e.g., courses, projects, thesis) when the last cohort or group of students completes its graduation requirements, will be offered the opportunity to complete the requirements of the cancelled program within a period of five (5) years after the end of the program. Requirements can be met through scheduled online courses or through independent study sessions led by the program faculty.

Teach Out Policy for Programs at Additional Locations

If the University decides to cancel a program that is delivered at an additional location, all necessary courses will continue to be offered until the last cohort or group of students completes all degree requirements. Any student(s) who have pending requirements (e.g., courses, projects, thesis) when the last cohort or group of students completes its graduation requirements, will be offered the opportunity to complete the requirements of the cancelled program within a period of five (5) years after the end of the program. Requirements can be met through scheduled courses, scheduled online courses or through independent study sessions led by the program faculty.
