New Ecostations!

USF Zief Law Library

The law library is excited about the arrival of new ecostations, which will help improve composting and recycling efforts on our campus. We have replaced the small trash cans and recycling bins in the library with ecostations with separate receptacles for landfill, compost, and recycling. You'll find ecostations on all three floors of the library. We've placed them at the east and west entrance areas to each floor, and we've also placed ecostations in the middle of the second and lower level study areas. As you can see from this picture, there are signs posted above the ecostations to help our patrons sort waste properly. If you have questions about the ecostations, please contact the Director of the Law Library, Amy Wright, at ajwright@usfca.edu.

Pro Bono Student of the Month:

Angelica Preciado

Angelica has dedicated over 85 hours of pro bono services during her 1L year including providing legal information to clients on their legal rights in the workplace and how to enforce those rights.

"I believe service is an essential component of my education because it challenges me to apply what I am learning in the classroom to real-world situations. It also reminds me of why I want to be an attorney and that is so that I can give back to the predominantly Latinx/migrant community that I grew up in. To me, pro bono work is an essential component of a true Jesuit education and my own personal act of self-sustainability. Through pro bono work, I practice the skills needed to truly engage in social justice lawyering and I am reminded of why I came to law school."

Join Provost Don Heller and the The Tracy Seeley Center for Teaching Excellence for a crucial inquiry into the academic life with Maggie Berg (Queen's University) and Barbara K. Seeber (Brock University). Over the summer, faculty from across USF read The Slow Professor: Challenging the Culture of Speed in the Academy, which compels readers to focus on personal wellness, challenge the status quo and find joy in our teaching. This event is open to the USF community and the public.

We’re thrilled to invite Professors Berg and Seeber to our campus for what is sure to be a perceptive discussion about our emotional and professional experiences as teachers!
