Mindful Self-Awareness

Overview

Mindfulness is intentionally observing our thoughts and feelings in the present, non-judgmentally. This seminar is primarily an experiential training where you will have an opportunity to try different mindfulness techniques.

With practice, mindfulness can help us get out of autopilot and be more in the moment. Over time, you will feel more focused and calmer. Mindful self-awareness can help us gain perspective, listen better, and step back to consider decisions more clearly and intentionally, rather than reactively.

Seminar Length: Approximately 1 hour

Program Overview

- · What is mindfulness
- · The case for mindfulness
- · How can I use mindfulness
- Practice a mindful check-in, mindful breathing, and body scanning

"What lies behind us and what lies before us are small compared to what lies within us."

- Ralph Waldo Emerson

Definition

What is Mindfulness?

- Mindfulness is being fully aware of what is happening in the moment, without filters or the lens of judgment.
- Mindfulness can be brought to any situation and involves cultivating awareness of the mind and body in the here and now.

© Concern

Mindfulness is about being fully aware of and open to what is happening in the moment, without passing judgment on it. You can bring mindfulness to any situation by:

- Cultivating awareness of mind and body
- Living in the here and now

Why Mindfulness?

The Case for Mindfulness

- · What we call the mind actually shapes the brain
- Interventions based on repetitive, positive experience may be restorative and therapeutic
- Thoughts, words and actions shape our behaviors
- Mind directly affects the body

An ounce of practice is better than tons of theories

© Concern

Mindfulness can bring you closer in touch with your psyche, and help you ...

- Identify the causes of suffering
- Alleviate stress and overcome anxiety

Take advantage of the brain's flexibility and plasticity

- Interventions based on repetitive, positive experiences can be therapeutic and restorative
- Nothing is set in stone

Mindfulness techniques can also help you ...

- Recognize your habitual thinking patterns and responses
- Directly relate to your life
- Step out of the trap set by your own thoughts

Mindful Check-In

Practice: Mindful Check-In

 Gets you in touch with how you're feeling – physically, mentally and emotionally

Stress

How are stressful situations affecting your life?

How is stress and anxiety over...

- Other people affecting your life?
- · Work affecting your life?
- The world affecting your life?
- · Sleeplessness affecting your life?
- Bad habits affecting your life?

Reflect on the following questions. Notice whatever comes up in your thoughts, feelings and sensations.

How are stress and anxiety over other people affecting your life?
How are stress and anxiety over work affecting your life?
How are stress and anxiety about the world affecting your life?
How are stress and anxiety about sleeplessness affecting your life?
How are stress and anxiety about bad habits affecting your life?

Take a moment to reflect on everything you wrote in this exploration. Do you recognize a pattern?

R.A.I.N. Technique

Change the internal dialog from "Why me?" to "I don't like this, but I can handle it."

- R Recognize when a strong emotion is present
- A Allow it and acknowledge that it is there
- I Investigate the body, emotions and thoughts
- N Non-identity with whatever is there

@ Concern

Take a moment to write about whatever came up for you mentally, emotionally, and physically during this exercise. What did you feel?

	Stress?	Elation?	Joy?	Any other emotions?
	Anxiety?	Sadness?	Anger?

Self-Inquiry

Mindful Self-Inquiry

- Discover what's really setting off strong emotional reactions
- Non-identification can take power away from the mind's stories
- Seeing your story as impermanent can help you loosen the grip of your own mind traps
- Gain new perspective and the freedom to choose an appropriate response

@ Concern

Tiny Habits

What tiny habit will you change?

- Considering your mindful techniques and journal reflections, what small changes will you commit to?
 - Start ridiculously small, be specific
 - Find an anchor routine
 - Celebrate!
